

Module I: Developing a Culture of Care

Introduction to Developing a Culture of Care	3
Competencies	3
The Residential Care Profession	3
A Brief History of Residential Care	4
Residential Treatment Today	5
Review Questions	5
Competency-Based Approach	6
Competencies	6
Youth Development as the Underlying Philosophy	6
Why Youth Development?	8
Review Questions	10
Needs and the Culture of Care	12
Competencies	12
Maslow’s Hierarchy of Basic Needs	13
Physical Needs	14
Safety Needs	15
Maslow’s Other Needs	15
Power	15
Balancing the Needs of the Individual with the Needs of the Milieu	16
Review Questions	16
The Roles of the Residential Worker	18
Competencies	18
Your Role as Developer of Structure and Ritual	19
Your Role as Nurturer	21
Your Role as Manager of Daily Tasks	22
Your Role as Provider of Experiences That Build on Competencies	22
Your Role as Advocate with/for Young People	23

Residential Child and Youth Care Professional

Your Role as Leader and Facilitator23

Your Role in Providing Therapeutic Interventions24

Your Role as Communicator25

Review Questions25

Tools for Responding to the Milieu27

Competencies27

Your Relationship with the Youth in Your Care27

Our Physical Plant29

Group Content30

Service Learning30

Plan to Manage Crisis31

Staff and Team32

Review Questions32

Caring for the Caregiver 33

Competencies33

Compassion Fatigue33

Strategies for Avoiding Compassion Fatigue34

How Do We Do This?35

Review Questions35

Summary37

Glossary 38

References 39

Answers to Review Questions 40

Module II: Understanding Child Development

Introduction to Understanding Child Development.	48
Competencies	48
Normal Development	49
Teaching Independent Living Skills	50
Review Questions	51
Infancy: The Period from Birth to Two Years	53
Competencies	53
Physical Development	54
Cognitive Development.	55
Emotional Development	56
Social Development	58
Sexuality Development	60
Responding to Children in Infancy	60
Teaching Independent Living Skills to Infants	63
Responding to Older Children Whose Behavior Fits Infancy	64
Review Questions	65
Early Childhood: The Period from Two to Six Years	67
Competencies	67
Physical Development	67
Cognitive Development.	68
Emotional Development	69
Social Development	70
Sexuality Development	70
Responding to Children in Early Childhood	71
Teaching Independent Living Skills to Children in Early Childhood.	73
Responding to Older Children Whose Behavior Fits Early Childhood	74
Review Questions	75

Middle Childhood: The Period from Six Years to Puberty	78
Competencies	78
Physical Development	78
Cognitive Development.	79
Emotional Development	80
Social Development	81
Sexuality Development	82
Responding to Children in Middle Childhood	83
Teaching Independent Living Skills to Children in Middle Childhood.	86
Responding to Older Children Whose Behavior Fits Middle Childhood	86
Review Questions	87
Adolescence: The Period from Puberty to Young Adulthood	89
Competencies	89
Physical Development	91
Cognitive Development.	92
Identity Development.	93
Social Development	94
Sexuality Development	95
Responding to Children in Adolescence	96
Teaching Independent Living Skills to Adolescents.	98
Youth Development Revisited.	99
Review Questions	100
Spiritual and Moral Development	102
Competencies	102
Moral Development.	102
Supporting Moral Development.	102
Spiritual Development	103
Nurturing Spiritual Development	103
Review Questions	104

Module III: Building Relationships

Introduction to Building Relationships	123
The Importance of Relationships	124
Competencies	124
What Do We Mean by Relationships?	125
Review Questions	128
Culture and Relationships	129
Competencies	129
Emphasis on Young People as a Culture	130
Cultural Competence	131
Review Questions	134
Recognizing Competency in Relationships	135
Competency	135
Competency-Based Approach	136
Review Questions	138
Communication	139
Competencies	139
Cultural Influences	140
Nonverbal Communication	142
Verbal Communication Techniques	143
Blocks to Effective Communication	145
Review Questions	147
Increasing Youths' Willingness to Form Relationships	150
Competency	150
Strategies for Developing Relationships	150
Review Questions	152

Residential Child and Youth Care Professional

Conflict Resolution153
Competencies153
TRIBE Model155
Review Questions156

Relationships and Transition157
Competency157
Review Questions158

Summary159

Glossary159

References160

Answers to Review Questions161

Module IV: Teaching Discipline

Introduction to Teaching Discipline	172
Needs and Behavior	173
Competencies	173
A Review of Maslow’s Hierarchy of Needs	173
What Is Discipline?	175
Review Questions	177
Developing the Learning Environment	178
Competencies	178
The Interaction Model	178
Youth Development and the Learning Environment	179
Expectations	180
Review Questions	182
Teaching Discipline	184
Competencies	184
Roles Adults Play	184
Use of Power	185
Reinforcement, Limit Setting, and Consequencing	187
Teaching Conflict Resolution Skills	192
Review Questions	193
Summary	195
Glossary	195
References	196
Answers to Review Questions	197

Preface

A standardized training program to strengthen the role and skill of child care professionals is critical to residential care services. In 1985, staff at the University of Oklahoma National Resource Center for Youth Services (NRCYS) began developing the Advanced Course for Residential Child Care Workers, which was published in 1986.

Since its publication, the material has been used by thousands of youth care professionals, nationally and internationally. In youth care work, as in any professional field, philosophy and practice have evolved over time. In an effort to incorporate these changes and feedback from the field, the following revision of the curriculum has been developed.

How to Use this Curriculum

To receive the most benefit from this curriculum, we recommend that the modules be read in order since each module builds on the one before. The information is meant to accompany the residential child and youth care professional course. Therefore, the modules should be read either prior to, or in conjunction with, the training sessions.

Things to keep in mind when reading this curriculum:

- The terms child, youth, and adolescent are used interchangeably in this curriculum.
- The words he and she are used alternately throughout this curriculum.
- The terms child care professional, youth care professional, and child and youth care professional are used interchangeably in this curriculum.
- Family is defined by each individual youth. In this curriculum you will see the terms caregiver, support network, and permanent connection used interchangeably with the term family.
- The curriculum focuses on work with children and youth in short- and long-term residential settings; however, the curriculum can be easily adapted for work with youth in schools and other nonresidential settings.

Introduction to the Curriculum

When the decision is made for children and youth to be placed in out-of-home settings it means their needs have not been met consistently or adequately in traditional family settings and relationships. These young people generally require a more structured environment in which social, emotional, and educational issues can be addressed comprehensively, and in which appropriate relationships with adults and other young people can be learned and practiced. The success of their placements depends largely on the development of consistent, nurturing, and helping relationships. Many people such as teachers, social workers, and therapists will be involved in building relationships with these children and youth. However, it is the child care professionals who have the greatest amount of interaction with these children and youth and, therefore, potentially the greatest impact on them.

The influence of child care staff on the children in their care cannot be underestimated. Child and youth care staff must understand agency philosophy and program goals and processes. They must have a solid understanding of their role in implementing agency values and approaches and interpreting this information to the young people, their families, and other professionals with whom they work. Youth care professionals' effectiveness in performing these functions is directly related to the training and support they receive.

This curriculum is designed to help improve the quality of residential care for children and youth by strengthening the skills of youth care staff that are responsible for the daily nurturing, care, and discipline of the young people placed in residential settings. The goals of the curriculum are to:

- provide youth care professionals, who work together, with a common knowledge base regarding residential care philosophy, values, and programs and their role in service delivery
- strengthen the skills of child care staff in the essential areas of developing a culture of care, understanding child development, building relationships, and teaching discipline
- relate current trends in residential care issues, programs, and child care staff roles.

Premises

As youth care professionals, it is important that we examine our values and beliefs about the program participants we serve and the services we provide. These values and beliefs have an impact on every aspect of our work with children, youth, and their families. Just so, a training curriculum must also have a basic foundation that drives the content and concepts it presents. In the Residential Child and Youth Care Professional curriculum this foundation is reflected in its premises. The key concepts conveyed in these premises include issues related to a strength-based approach, learning opportunities, youth empowerment and involvement, relationship development, the programmatic culture of care, and collaboration with a number of resources. The following five premises provide the basic foundation and philosophy for working with children, youth, and their families which are reflected in this training curriculum.

Premise 1—Children and youth in residential care must receive services that do more than focus on problems or deficits. They need a wide range of appropriately challenging and supportive opportunities to explore, learn, and grow as individuals.

While we cannot ignore the problems and deficits that bring young people into care, it simply is not enough to base our programs on trying to eliminate them. Problem free is not fully prepared. The time young people spend in care will be much more productive if we focus on their strengths and competencies and work with them to build new skills to meet their needs more effectively. In order to change their behavior, we must assist the youth in learning new behavior to replace the old, and the best way to do this is through programs that provide opportunities to practice. Additionally, youth care professionals must view these opportunities as rights rather than as privileges that must be earned and can be taken away.

Premise 2—Children and youth in residential care and their families must be engaged and actively involved in all aspects of the services they receive. This includes assessment, goal setting, case planning, activities, program design, and program evaluation.

The concept of assessment and service from a strengths/needs perspective is vital. Critical to the process is the involvement of youth in their own assessments and case planning. Young people need to be able to partner with the people responsible for their case planning and implementation. They must also be involved, to the fullest extent possible, in their services and in planning for their own futures. In addition, their families (or other support networks) need to be involved, as much as possible, in what happens to their children.

Premise 3—Children and youth in residential care must have opportunities to establish caring relationships in their lives. Their growth and progress occurs within the context of their relationships with staff, peers, family members, and other caring adults.

Many children and youth who come into care have not had the opportunity to establish healthy relationships with others, particularly adults. Often it is this lack of connection that brings them to our programs. Youth care professionals must demonstrate the warmth, respect, supportiveness, and encouragement necessary to engage young people. We must provide them with opportunities to form relationships with us, their peers, and others, if we want them to learn the skills necessary to form other relationships throughout their lives. The relationships young people are involved in actually provide the context for them to learn and grow. If we do not establish relationships with youth, they will not engage with us nor learn from us.

Premise 4—Children and youth in residential care must be served in programs that take into account environmental influences on growth and progress. Environments include physical, cultural, philosophical, and social dimensions.

Residential Child and Youth Care Professional

In order to effectively serve children and youth, we need to examine the environment of our program to ensure that it promotes positive development. It is essential that we provide services that are culturally and socially relevant to the young people and their community. Our culture of care must be safe, healthy, and accessible in order to create an environment that promotes learning, practice, and growth.

Premise 5—Children and youth in residential care must be served in programs that collaborate and form partnerships with a number of resources. Those resources include the youth, their families, staff, other service providers, and the community.

First and foremost, we must view young people and their families (when possible) as resources, and partner with them to provide services that meet their needs. Our work with youth cannot, and should not, be done alone. Collaboration with other staff and other service providers helps to ensure that young people are receiving services that are consistent and meaningful to them. Additionally, through access to resources in the community, young people have a variety of opportunities to learn and practice new skills and behaviors. Participation in these partnerships opens the door for youth to establish permanent connections.

These premises support a competency-based approach and are reflected in the following four modules. Competency-based programs focus on strengths young people have rather than the problems they exhibit. It is our belief that by supporting their strengths we can provide more effective care for young people, and enable them to make a more successful transition when they leave our programs.